Codes of Practice and other guidance material

This information bulletin explains the difference between codes of practice and other types of guidance material and outlines the development processes for a model code of practice.

What is the difference between a code of practice and other types of guidance material?

A code of practice is a practical guide on how to comply with the legal duties under the Work Health and Safety (National Uniform Legislation) Act and Regulations – the WHS (NUL) Act and Regulations.

Codes of practice have a special status because a code that has been approved in the Northern Territory is automatically admissible as evidence in court proceedings under the WHS Act and Regulations. Courts may regard an approved code of practice as evidence of what is known about a hazard, risk or control and may rely on the code in determining what is reasonably practicable in the circumstances to which the code relates.

Codes of Practice

- deal with a duty or obligation under the WHS (NUL) Act or Regulations
- include known information about particular hazards, risks and control measures
- help in determining what is reasonably practicable in the circumstances
- can be supplemented with other types of guidance material.

Other types of guidance documents

Other types of guidance documents also help duty holders comply with the law but differ from the authoritative advice of a code of practice by allowing duty holders wider discretion to choose the options that best suit their circumstances. Guidance material contributes to the overall state of knowledge regarding hazards, risks and controls and may be tendered as evidence in court proceedings.

How are decisions to develop a model code of practice made?

Safe Work Australia's members, decide whether guidance is needed on a particular topic and whether it should be developed as a code of practice or as guidance material.

A document is assessed as being suitable as a code of practice if the majority of the following criteria are met:

1. Guidance is a necessary part of enabling compliance with the duties contained in the WHS (NUL) Act and/or Regulations, particularly to support legislative provisions that are outcome focused or do not provide much detail.
2. There is clear evidence of a significant risk or widespread work health and safety problem where evidentiary status of a code will elevate the importance of the issue.

3. There are certain preferred or recommended methods to be used (or standards to be met) to achieve compliance.
4. The information on the hazard, risks and control measures is well-established, reflects the state of knowledge without any gaps and therefore will not require frequent updating.

Safe Work Australia's members may decide that a document is suitable as a code of practice or as a guide at any time during the development stage (i.e. before drafting begins, when considering a first draft or when considering a final version after public comment).

What is the process for developing codes of practice?

Developing a code of practice is a formal process that requires:

- consultation with governments, unions, employer organisations and the public
- consideration of regulatory impact
- approval by the Select Council of Workplace Relations (SCWR)
- approval as a code by the relevant Minister.

Unlike other types of guidance material, codes of practice may need to be assessed for their regulatory impact on business or not-for-profit organisations. The decision on whether a Regulation Impact Statement is required for a code of practice is made by the Commonwealth Office of Best Practice Regulation.

Who can initiate a proposal for a model code of practice or guidance material?

A submission can be made by industry, unions or government bodies through their Safe Work Australia representatives. This is a preferred option as it may facilitate the process and support for the proposal.

Alternatively a proposal can be submitted to the Safe Work Australia agency.

For further information on how to make a submission contact Safe Work Australia on (02) 6121 5317 or by emailing info@safeworkaustralia.gov.au

Approving a Code of Practice

The WHS (NUL) Act outlines the requirements and process for a model code of practice to be approved in the Northern Territory. The Minister may only approve a code of practice if that code of practice was developed by a process that involved consultation between, unions, employer organisations and the Governments of the Commonwealth and each State and Territory.

The Minister may also vary and revoke a code of practice provided the consultation process outlined above has been completed.
